Stressed out and overeating? Learn to take control

Are you in the habit of devouring stacks of cookies or gorging on chips when you're stressed out, anxious, angry, sad or bored? It's common to use food as a way to stuff down or alleviate stress and other uncomfortable emotions. Unfortunately, the "emotional eating" food choices are often high-calorie and loaded with carbohydrates, sugar, salt and/or fat. Here are some healthier ways to manage stress and other strong feelings and regain control of your eating habits.
